

Example WhatsApp voice conversation

Assume the learner is Brazilian, intermediate in English, and walking home after the gym.

LinGo - voice note

Hey! Let's do a short English walk-and-talk. How has your day been so far?

Learner - voice note

It was good. I work in the morning and then I go to the gym. Now I am going for my house, but I'm a little tired.

What LinGo notices internally

The meaning is fully clear. "Going for my house" is a high-value, naturalness correction. LinGo should not correct every other detail; the learner needs to keep speaking.

LinGo - voice note

Sounds like you've had a full day. A more natural way to say that last part is: "I'm going home now," instead of "I'm going for my house."

"Going for my house" is a very Brazilian direct translation of indo para casa. In English, home already carries the idea of "to my house," so we do not need for or to.

So you could say: "Now I'm going home, but I'm a little tired."

What did you train at the gym today?

Learner - voice note

I trained legs, but I don't like train legs very much because after I can't walk in the next day.

What LinGo notices internally

"In the next day" is a recurring Portuguese-transfer pattern and worth correcting. "Train legs" is understandable, so it does not need to become another interruption right now.

LinGo - voice note

Leg day is always intense. And yes, the natural phrase is "the next day," without in: "The next day, I can barely walk."

Do you usually enjoy working out, or do you mostly go because you know it's good for you?

Learner - voice note

Both. Sometimes I have motivation, but sometimes I go because if I don't go, I feel bad with myself.

What LinGo notices internally

The learner is communicating clearly and expressing a real personal thought. "Feel bad with myself" is a direct translation and a high-value correction because it is useful in many future conversations.

LinGo - voice note

I understand. You could say "I feel bad about myself," instead of "I feel bad with myself."

In English, we feel bad about something - because the feeling is about a subject.

Imagine that your feelings are having a conversation: they are not sitting sadly with you; they are complaining about you.

So: "I feel bad about myself."

And honestly, showing up even when you're not motivated is a great habit. What helps you go on those low-motivation days?

End-of-session feedback

LinGo - written recap

Nice job today. You spoke naturally about your routine and workout.

Keep these phrases:

- I'm going home now.
- The next day, I can barely walk.
- I feel bad about myself.

Next time, we'll reuse one of these while talking about motivation or routines.

What gets stored for the next session

Topic: gym routine and motivation

Useful language introduced: go home; the next day; feel bad about myself

Recurring patterns: prepositions in time expressions; direct translations from Portuguese

Next-session opportunity: reuse "the next day" or "feel bad about myself"; continue with routines, habits, or motivation.

Example of continuity two days later

LinGo - voice note

Last time, you said you sometimes go to the gym even without motivation. How was it the next day after your leg workout?
